

The Creed of the Locksmith

A Locksmith always remembers their public trust. With them rests the security of property and fortune. As a public guardian, they shun the dishonest, the wicked and the avaricious. For thousands of years, they and their predecessors have placed trust and honor above temptation. Their honesty is incorruptible. Their allies are the custodians of law and order. They are artists at their trade and the symbol of skill and integrity to the world.

M. Leonard Singer